Historiador Chabret street, San Vicente de Paul street, Higuieruelas street, Arquitecto Rodriguez street and Torrebaja street.

The traditional historic quarter of Oriols is listed as an Asset of Local Significance (BRL), and consists of 3 blocks of traditional two-storey houses. The houses are testimony to the rural past, and are in the rectangle formed by Historiador Chabret street, San Vicente street de Paul, Higuieruelas street, Arquitecto Rodriguez street and Torrebaja street.

Until the 20th century, there was a hermitage, and a rice mill, "el molí d Oriols ", in an arm of the Rascaña irrigation canal. Today a school stands on its ruins.

The origins of the Oriols neighbourhood can be traced to a Muslim farmhouse in the Rascaña district which, in 1237, James I donated to Guillem Aguiló free of tributes. The Canon of the Cathedral of València and Attorney General of the Duchy of Gandía, Pedro de Oriols took ownership of the farmhouse in 1388.

In 1489, the monks of San Jerónimo de Cotalba monastery took possession of the estate and changed the old name of Rascaña to Oriols (today Oriols).

The settlement was slowly taking shape around the natural access to San Miguel de los Reyes Monastery.

Oriols was an independent municipality with its own mayor from 1821 until 1882, when it was annexed to València. The population's activity was basically agricultural, including production of hemp, flowers, wheat, orange trees, vegetables, mulberry trees, and raising pigs.
